

New Pets

One of the really fun things about getting a new dog or cat, is that they can learn a lot from your existing cat or dog. And that is particularly true if the new dog or cat is a puppy or kitten. They're coming into your home and they need to learn what is acceptable behavior, what is not acceptable behavior, and your routine.

And the truth of the matter is... nobody can teach a dog or a cat better than another dog or cat can. And in large part because they communicate on the same level.

Considerations that are important for people to take into account when they're considering getting another dog or cat.

- Financial commitment (food, care, medical)
- Time commitment (especially with puppies and kittens)
- Family members in the home
- Existing pets in the home

90% of dog training is actually people training. It's teaching people how to explain to the dog what it is that you actually want them to do.
